A) There is a popular belief that learning modern history is more vital than studying ~~the~~ ancient one. Although the latter has to be explored thoroughly, my standpoint is that the former makes ^{ww} higher significance nowadays.

It is common knowledge, that the basics of modern science were established by ancient cultures. Math, architecture, astronomy – such parts of science were developed by human, even before the Medievals. It is important to give credit and beware of the ^{ww} far times as our ancestors made a great contribution to the history. Had it not been for ancient ~~eterna~~ civilizations, there might not have been any improvement in science and technology. Furthermore, it is part and parcel to ~~highlight~~ highlight the significance and influence of the ancient Roman politics and Greek philosophy which have formed the laws and principles we have to abide by these days.

At the same time, studying more recent historical events implies gaining accurate knowledge. In fact, due to improved science, copywriting and printing we are able to be taught certain and trustworthy information. Thus it is possible to form a better outlook on historical events, thanks to the Internet. Moreover, for the accurate notes of ~~past~~ ^{the} previous events we can analyse problems which occurred and put all effort to preserve mistakes from happening again. It relates to ^{the} armed conflicts and diseases.

To recapitulate, it is absolutely vital to ~~beware of~~ be aware of both ancient and recent history. However, I reckon it is more important to focus on learning the latter, ^{nowadays} as it provides ~~more de~~ sophisticated information in ~~more~~ details and influences our life a lot. As ~~stated~~ ^{stated} aforementioned, to err is human, and our aim is to learn from previous made mistakes.
