Task №5

As schoolboys and schoolgirls, we all would like it if one beautiful morning school just stopped existing so we could take a breath of relief and go live our best lives. But we also should be aware that education is very important for our future. So here comes the question: should holidays be shorter, or, opposite of that, longer?

So proponents of the idea of shorter holidays believe that it would allow for more learning time but I can't agree with them. Why? First of all, we already spend so much time at school during a day it starts to feel like school is where I live and not my home. Secondly, in current states of matter, our school curriculum has so much unnecessary things in it that we will either forget, or, if somehow remembered, won't do any jobs for us in the future. What I'm trying to say here is that if we use the given time for educating kids sensibly and leave curriculum with only useful things that will actually help the children in their future careers and to become a bigger, kinder person, then we will not need to shorten holidays!

In conclusion, I don't think that school holidays should be shorter. Leave us, kids, alone!
