Internet and modern technologies play a significant role in all spheres of our modern life. ^{Thanks} Due to the Internet, people can communicate even if they live in different parts of the Earth. To my mind, modern technologies have more advantages than drawbacks, so I am going to prove it by the following arguments.

To begin with, sometimes members of one family can live in different cities or even countries, which makes their meetings more ^{rare} ~~seldom~~. However, using video-connection and messengers can help these people to unite. Besides, Internet can ~~help~~ connect people that have same interests. For instance, there are lots of chess clubs in the Net today. If chess-lovers want to organise a competition or just to play together, they only need to enter the web-site www.lichess.org and to call a competitor. That's why I suppose that modern technologies unite and connect people.

However, some people of the older generations ^{might} think that Internet can cause isolation and quarrels between people. For example, when one people post different photos of expensive goods and trips to the foreign countries, other people, who can't afford these things, stop communication. To my mind, Internet doesn't make a friendship but people do, so if they quarrel, it isn't a fault of modern technologies that just connect people.

In conclusion, I'd like to say that I disagree with this statement. Modern technologies can become a nice way of uniting and connecting people but the relationships are fully in their responsibility.
