Lost

Childhood

(100) + 35 = 135

The scariest moment in my life was the day I realized that my childhood was no more. It happened when my parents informed me that we had to move to another city. I was so shocked by this news that I just couldn't believe my ears. We had been living in our cozy house since I was born. I didn't want to go anywhere. I was afraid to leave my friends, the school where I had studied since the first grade and even our old yard, where every tree reminded me of happy moments. But my parents insisted. Within a few weeks we were living in a new city.

The first days in the new place were the hardest. I felt lonely and lost. The new school turned out to be completely different from the one I was studied. The teachers were strict, the classmates were cold and aloof. I didn't tell anyone about my feelings for fear of appearing weak or stupid. Instead, I shut myself in and spending most of my time at home reading books or drawing.

It wasn't until a few months later that I began to gradually adapt to my new life. However, this experience has left a deep mark on my soul. Now I understand how important it is to appreciate every moment of my childhood and cherish those who are close to me.
