Teenagers and screen time.

With the rise of technology, people have been worrying about teenagers spending too much time on their smartphones. Is this concern justified? It is true that teenagers have a lot of screen time, and there are many problems with that. It can isolate a person from the real world in many ways. For example, a person could <sup>start</sup> ~~lose~~ interest in their hobbies and neglect <sup>no</sup> their responsibilities and health. In another scenario, someone could get an incorrect view on a serious topic as it is very easy to come across misinformation ~~or people with harmful opinions on the~~ Internet. Staring at a screen for too long could worsen eyesight, hateful or depressing content could have a negative impact on someone's mental health, especially a kid's or teen's.

However, there are also positives to using smartphones and social media. Making art, reading, listening to music, watching films and ~~doing other~~ hobbies ~~(or even work)~~ are all very accessible and portable, ~~so people can~~ enjoy them just about anywhere at any time. There is also the social aspect – anyone can share their interests and find new ones, connect with people with similar passions or views.

Overall, I believe that a lot of teenagers use social media and smartphones too much, to the point where harm is possible, and I agree with the concern. But at the same time, I think that smartphones on their own aren't a problem ~~and are even beneficial~~, the damage only really comes from overusing them.
