Recently I listened to a radio interview and found out that the question of studying modern versus ancient history often appears to be the subject of endless discussions. Some believe that modern history is more important, while others say we should concentrate on studying ancient history. I am concerned that modern history is more significant nowadays, and I would like to explain why.

To begin with, modern history is more factual and therefore less uncertain because all the events happened not so far from today as ancient. It is easier to study all the facts and things as they are not so damaged because of the time as ancient, lost, rewritten or remade by other people. Also, modern history is more similar to our days as some of the things that were invented those days are still used and they let us to come up with new inventions. That is why modern history is more vital nowadays than ancient, so that we could learn from our mistakes, make new things and develop our world.

However, ancient cultures laid the foundations for astronomy, maths and architecture. It is true that without ancient history there would be no present. But I think people have already learnt enough about the medieval period and everything before that, so there is no need to study it anymore with the same importance as modern. We should concentrate on history that we are still able to study, and not as ancient, with less confirmed information or almost destroyed things, clothes and culture, but as modern, with more ^{actual} information, important events and people.

In conclusion, I want to say again that, of course, ancient history laid the beginning for the future history, but it would be better today for us to develop our world with the help of modern history as it still has a lot of things and ideas to discover.
